LONDON, SATURDAY, July 31, 1731. NUMB. LXVIII.

To the AUTHOR of the WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR,

AS you seem to be a Lover of Novelty, and a Friend to Imagination, I have taken the Liberty to send you the Inclos'd for the Entertainment of your Readers.——'Tis an Account of the first Acquaintance of Leviathan, the Devil of Patriotism, with a young Student of Oxford, and seems to be so natural and probable, that even the Turn of Fable which the Author has chosen to give it, does not abate the Consistency of the whole; it appears to be an Imitation of the celebrated Diable Boiteaux in its Manner, and undoubtedly is as true a Picture of Patriotism as the other of Pleasure.——I thought it proper to introduce it to the World while the Controversy continued warm, that, if the Publick will engage in such Pursuits, it may afford them Amusement, as well as Advantage.——This I take to be our Author's original Meaning; he saw the Debate began to grow dry and tedious, and, for that Reason, has taken some Pains to embellish it with Strokes of Humour, and Liveliness of Imagination.——Those who are only fond of irresistible Arguments, and undeniable Facts, may be supplied by greater Authorities; but, as this political Caprice is to be condemn'd in general, a general Satire may be suitable, and the Devil Leviathan like Don Quixote or Hudibras, do as much Service as a severer Declamation.

Some few Years ago, a certain Student, belonging to a certain College, in a certain University, who was admirably well skill'd in the Art of Punning, and a thorough Master of Local Wit, became unfortunate enough to wage War with his Superiors, and turn'd their own Weapons upon themselves; Satire upon Satire came out, and Lampoon follow'd Lampoon; there was no Intermission of Pasquinades, no Cessation of Libels: The Principals saw the full Force of his Ridicule, because the Manner of it was copied from their own, and were at a Loss to defend themselves, because their Antagonist had ingross'd all their Wit to himself.——But what they wanted one Way they supplied another, they laid the Ax at the Root of the Tree at once, and expell'd the young Gentleman without Mercy, for presuming to have more Sense than themselves, and quarrelling with Customs that had been establish'd from Generation to Generation.——This was a Blow there was no guarding against, and he learn'd too late there was more Wisdom in bearing a small Inconvenience for one's own Sake, than there was Merit in complaining of what was without Remedy.——Now was Master Nibble turn'd out upon the wide World to shift for himself, or, in other Words, to live upon the Wits he had tried to so little Purpose hitherto.——The University was the worst Place imaginable for that Purpose; Wit was pretended to be the staple Commodity there, and there was no Hope of Encouragement where 'twas a Drug already; for this Reason he thought it proper to remove to London, and, in the full Swarm of that populous Hive, expected to retrieve his Fortune.——His Pen was to him, like a Switzer's Sword, his only Estate, and as ready to be drawn in any Service whatever; Men in Power, he imagin'd, were the likeliest Persons to employ him, and the ablest to reward him; to them therefore he made his first Application, and publish'd a profess'd Treatise for their Service; but, being cooly receiv'd, as one of little Importance, as one who had made an unnecessary Proposal, he declin'd in his Zeal, and resolv'd to make his Court to other Persons, and on other Principles.——This was his last Resort, the utmost Remedy he had any Dependence on, and this seem'd precarious too.——In this Reflection he grew melancholy, lost all his former Gayety and Spirit, and roam'd up and down the World like a Murderer, who dreaded the Eye of the Avenger, sad and comfortless.——One Evening, when he was under the most dismal Apprehensions of Futurity, and was most penitent for what was past, he happen'd into the Library of an old Patriot that was just dead, and his Books, according to modern Custom, set to Sale to the highest Bidder.——He mingled with the Crowd of Buyers, read over the Catalogue, survey'd the Books, examin'd the Editions, Authors, Indexes, &c. and admir'd the Cant of the whole.——He had not been there long, before a Man with a very odd Aspect put a Pamphlet into his Hand, stil'd, The Art of Railing against Great Men, and bid him observe the Title Page; he did very intently, and, of a sudden, a Picture appear'd very plain before him, of the Author putting his own Precepts in Practice, and growing popular by libelling the Ministry; he had exalted himself on a Stage or Scaffold, just opposite to the House of a certain noble Personage; in the Attitude of a Painter he seem'd to copy all his Actions in a Grotesque Taste of Contempt and Ridicule, and presented his Labours to the Mob, who gave him loud Applauses, and appear'd hugely satisfied with his Dexterity and Skill.——Another Column represented him throwing Dirt on the Royal Palace, and calling upon the Multitude to do the same; while some of his Agents set up Bills over the Door as if 'twas vacant, and only waited for a new Tenant to take Possession.——A third describ'd him storming the Parliament House, at the Head of the Populace as before, with a long Label winding from his Mouth with Liberty! Patriotism! standing Armies! Corruption, &c. inscrib'd upon it, while some of their Accomplices from within seem'd to join the Cry, and voted the Licence of a Riot to be Part of the Constitution.——Nibble was exceedingly surpriz'd at this wonderful Picture, which had risen so suddenly before him, and look'd on the Man that put it in his Hand with no small Astonishment, who, perceiving it, instantly beckon'd him into a Corner of the Room remote from Company, and explain'd himself in the following Manner.——Son Nibble, I have been long acquainted with your Merits and Sufferings.——How! interrupted the Scholar, I never saw you in my Life before, that I remember.——No Matter, replies the other, I am intimately acquainted with you notwithstanding.——I am Leviathan the Devil of Patriotism; don't be under any Apprehension, I have taken you under my Protection, and you shall have no Reason to decline my Favour.——'Tis one Part of my Business in the World to search out such Persons as you, and employ them for the Benefit of Mankind; I have long had my Eye upon you for one of my Favourites, and it shall be your own Fault if you don't make your Fortune.——At the Word Fortune the Scholar's Heart jump'd within him, 'twas a Word that had always given him Pain hitherto, but now, even in the Devil's Mouth, 'twas welcome; who, observing his Transport, thus continued his Temptation.——You must know I have had my present Station in the World for above four thousand Years, and except the Romans, never met with a People more devoted to my Influence than the Generality of these; Change is their Idol, their God; this gives me such frequent Opportunity of laying my Snares, and securing the Success——I always side with the Party in Disgrace, and, under the Pretence of Patriotism, stir up the People to Mutiny: I have the perfect Secret of entring into Mens Passions, and making that appear best which flatters their Resentments most: Pride, Ambition, Avarice, and Revenge are my Agents, I keep them in perpetual Employ, and they perform their Parts to Admiration, they gain me Converts every Week, and 'tis my Business to conceal the true Motive of their Reformation.——If you are inclin'd to redeem yourself from your present unhappy Circumstance, if you are willing to revenge yourself on those who were insensible of your Merits, if you are desirous of becoming popular, and making yourself a Name, declare yourself for my Cause, and become a Patriot for the Service of your Country.——Here the Scholar was greatly terrified at the Proposal, and pointed to a Pillory that happen'd to be in Sight by Way of Answer.——Don't be afraid, rejoins the Devil, of any such infamous Event.——You shan't make the Attack alone, I have Friends enough to support and deliver you: Observe that Gentleman yonder! he has been refus'd a Place; the next to him has lost another; this noble Lord has been disappointed of a Pension he applied for; and that Baronet has been deny'd a Peerage; these Men make it their Interest to defend you; and, as the Butchers present their Bucks to save a Dog that has been toss'd at the Bear Garden, will interpose their Riches and Authority to screen you from Punishment.——The Scholar was something encourag'd by this Promise, and ventur'd to ask his new Patron how he could be useful in carrying on the common Cause? That you shall know immediately, answers the Devil; the Design is ripe for the Execution, and only waited for your Approbation: On this he presented him a Scheme of the Craftsman, plac'd his own Portrait in the Front, and bid him sign it Caleb D'Anvers. SIR,

AS you have already publish'd a Letter from me to a Physician whom I apprehended to be on his Death-Bed, you will farther oblige me, in printing this on his Recovery; there may be other Persons in the same Circumstance with him, and what was calculated for his particular Service, mayn't be unseasonable to the Publick in General.

I am, Sir, &c.

To a Doctor of Physick on his Recovery.

I Rejoice, Sir, at your late wonderful Recovery: Nay, if you will allow me to affirm what is bona fide true, I rejoice, altho' my former friendly Expostulations should prove, like these on your Recovery, the Motives of your Mirth and Ridicule. This shall not however absolve me from the Duties of a Christian and a Friend: For I am resolute to persist in my Endeavours to reform, notwithstanding your Evil Genius should prevail on you still to contemn my Ambition for that Purpose. What then you now impute to Strength of Constitution, I shall rather chuse to accept for you as a favourable Forbearance of Providence. And to give my Charity the better Countenance, I shall chuse to flatter myself, that your liberal Education may have been some Preservative as to moral Duties; that your Vocation has not led you much into the Breaches of those of an inferior Kind, I mean such as respect meum and tuum; and that Principle rather than Apprehension may have contributed to your Temperance, and other Virtues of a Degree yet more noble; under which auspicious Aspect can it be any Way inconsistent with Christianity to imagine, that Heaven may have spar'd you a little longer, with a Prospect of reclaiming you, in bountifully allowing you before you go hence, some Moments for a Consideration of Things of a superior Nature? Mistake me not, I mean not by Heaven, that Place which we esteem merely the Residence of the Blessed (which in my hearing you have more than once entertain'd the Mention of with Contempt:) But, by Heaven, I figuratively intend the infinite Creator of it and all Things; whom you would pretend to entertain an awful Notion of, at the same Time that you allow yourself the Liberty of questioning his Influence, and of circumscribing his Attributes. But, in my humble Opinion, no Man ought to set up for a Physician, who is not, in Nature at least, a compleat Philosopher; and, if the great Verulam say true, that only the Smatterer in Philosophy can be in Danger of Atheism, I hope, a Tenderness for your own good Character will engage you to a little useful Consideration; but then, at last, put your Reason and Sense to a right Use. Consider sedately, whether in an advanc'd Age, like yours, so unexpected an Alteration may not be more justly attributed to the Beneficence of some gracious and over-ruling Power, than to the uncertain Means of the best of your own Applications. Uncertain as they are in their Origin; but doubly uncertain in a Choice which your prevailing Infirmities render'd doubly dubious. Or if you should continue dogmatically to assign the whole to Soundness of Constitution, tell me by what Rule in Logick do you argue when you assign that for a Cause, which wants the Power of producing an Effect. Nature in you seem'd expiring; and what they have advance'd and pronounc'd the best Physick, amounted not to so much as their best Asylum, a happy Guess. For tho' in Youth, or Persons adult, some such Plea might be allow'd; yet when Age makes a Person, like the fabled Atlas, bend beneath his Burden; and when every Cramp appears in the Shape of a Summons to a certain Dissolution; methinks some other Way of Argument might be allow'd more consentaneous to the Rules of right Reason. Should we see fresh Sap arise in a Tree almost decay'd by Age, and whose arid Branches had many Years forbid all Expectation, must it not necessarily exact our Wonder and Surprize? And yet human Bodies are of so infinitely nicer a Contexture, and consequently liable to so many more Accidents than any of the vegetable Kind, that Anatomists, and the greatest Masters in Physick, have been oftner thrown into Admiration at the Numbers that safely pass through such a vast Variety of impending Perils, than at the few in Comparison, that fall the Martyrs of Chance and Accident. A Grape-Stone has been the Death of a jovial Lyrick in the Midst of his merry Compotations; and Experience daily affords us Instances of Men and Women, to outward Appearance in a full State of Health, that drop down the Victims of another World, in the Middle of their Enjoyments of this: But from all this can any Man in his Wits make any other reasonable Deduction, than that there must be some superior Power on whom all created Things must have their Dependence? I shall purposely avoid quoting any one sacred Text to prove my Postulatum; because you have so often publickly demonstrated a Panick at the very Mention; and therefore I shall only at this Time offer, that in my poor Opinion a very Heathen, if he would be at the Pains of taking any Prospect of his own Formation, must acknowledge, that a little serious Consideration would be of Service in such a Crisis; and with the brenuous Temper, I flatter myſelf, that ſuch a Conſideration could hardly fail to have the Effect I contend for; and reduce him to the Neceſſity of acknowledging ſuch a ſuperior Dependence. And ſuch a ſuperior Being acknowledg'd, as it muſt forcibly lead him to conſider a little further, how inconſiſtent it muſt be with ſuch an Acknowledgment, to defer an Opportunity thrown into his Hands of lifting up his Eyes to him for his wonderful Forbearance! And ſhould not that reaſonably lead him on to weigh, if endu'd with the leaſt Principle of Gratitude, the Deſign of ſuch a merciful Forbearance? What leſs Event could ſuch a Conſideration poſſibly be attended with, than a Reſolution to improve the prolong'd Moments in a Search into the Nature and Goodneſs of that gracious Being, who had ſo bountifully preſerv'd him when human Medicine ſeem'd of little Avail? Now this being obtain'd, I dare anſwer for it, that the Notion of Annihilation would of itſelf vaniſh, Reaſon would deſpiſe it, and as earneſtly evince, that as ſo merciful, as well as ſo wiſe a Being could not create without Deſign and Purpoſe, ſo the beſt Way of his Creatures anſwering the Purpoſe of his Creation, would be by a Reſignation to his infinite Will and Diſpoſal, who to anſwer his Attributes of Juſtice and Wiſdom muſt have ordain'd ſomewhat for rational Beings, that our finite Underſtandings cannot as yet fathom. For if it be not conſiſtent with the Juſtice and Wiſdom of an infinite Being to create to no End, it will neceſſarily compel a rational Being to proceed and conſider for what End the moſt compleat Part of the Creation, ſuch as a Being endu'd with rational Faculties, could be created. Brutes have no apparent Uſe of theſe Faculties, and therefore have them not. Man was ordain'd, I mean created, for a nobler End, the Praiſe of his Creator; and therefore by a right Uſe of theſe Faculties of Diſtinction, being made able to diſtinguiſh between Good and Evil, he will naturally expect Rewards and Puniſhments. But as theſe Rewards and Puniſhments are evidently here on Earth diſtributed in a Manner that would ſometimes lead him to queſtion Almighty Juſtice; on a nicer Scrutiny, thoſe reaſoning Faculties will force him to make his Reſource in that infinite Goodneſs, that firſt form'd him for nobler Ends than Annihilation, and conſequently for Rewards or Puniſhments in ſome more glorious Region, ſuitable to the Deſigns of a gracious Creator. This may be the merciful Deſign of your late Recovery; and that it may have its happy Effect is the hearty wiſh of,

Your, &c.

SATURDAY, July 24.

YESTERDAY Morning a Powder-Mill at Maidſtone in Kent blew up, by which Accident two Men and a Child, that were in it, were kill'd; a Paper-Mill and a Houſe adjoining were deſtroy'd by the Shock, and the Tyling and Windows of ſeveral Houſes very much ſhatter'd, as were alſo the Windows of the Church that ſtood a great Way diſtant.

The ſame Day about One o'Clock in the Afternoon, the Common Sewer (near the Cocoa-Tree) in Pall-Mall fell in, and Sir Jeremy Sambroke's Coach being waiting for him, as the Coachman was driving the Horſes round, had the Misfortune to fall in with it; but by the Aſſiſtance of ſeveral Chairmen and others they were got out, and ſuſtained little Damage.

On Tueſday Evening Miſs Worſley, a young Lady, Niece to the Lady Seawen, being out on Banſtead Downs in an open Chaiſe, having a Footman on Horſeback following, was attack'd by one Highwayman, who came up to the Horſe's Head, and ſhew'd his Piſtol after the uſual Greeting; the Footman was diſabled by the Fright, but the Lady ſtruck at him with her Whip ſeveral Times, and Company coming up, he thought fit to march off without any Booty.

Bucalemu, September 12, 1730. On the 8th of July at three Quarters paſt One in the Morning, a great and diſmal Earthquake awakened us, with violent Shocks and Commotions, ſhaking the whole College, which made us come out almoſt naked, and in great Confuſion to the Court-yard, where we could not ſtay with Safety, ſo great was the Earthquake, which continued about the Space of a Miſerere; but at that Time no Part of the Houſe fell. We went in again, and the Padre Rector told us it would return, as it really did, four Times before Four o'Clock that Morning; but not ſo violent, and at three Quarters after that, a furious Shock came, when we were in the Yard, with a Noiſe like Thunder; upon this the Tiles and Covering fell, and the Ruin of this College enſued. The Shocks continued above an Hour and a Half, and all that Day, alſo Saturday and Sunday the Shocks and Noiſe were ſo frequent, that we may ſafely ſay we felt more than 200 in thoſe two Days. The following Day we had not ſo many; but for a Month afterwards no Day paſſed without ſix or eight Shocks; and now at the Time of writing this, which is more than two Months ſince it firſt began, we ſee daily two or three, and ſometimes four Shocks, ſome violent and laſt long, cauſing freſh Deſtruction: So that we ſleep in our Cloaths, to be in Readineſs to fly, and the College being almoſt entirely deſtroy'd, we live in Cottages made out of the Ruins of it. At the Time of the Earthquake, the Sea broke thro' the Lake where they uſed to fiſh, and overflowed the Country above three Leagues, and as the Breach was very large, a great Quantity of Land belonging to this College, and that of St. Domingo, is left covered with Sand; ſo that it will never produce Corn or Graſs. The Sea did no other Damage here; but the Rain very much. The Deſtruction has been great at St. Jago, the Capital of this Kingdom, from whence you will have better Advice. Our great College there is in a worſe State than this here; all the Churches, except that of St. James's, have ſuffered more or leſs, the Nunnery's Tiling is fallen in; but the Walls ſtand. St. Michael's is irreparable, and the arched Roof of La Merced fell to the Ground, and half of St. Auguſtin's with its Steeples, and threw down the Choir and a Chapel; and its ſaid St. Peter's is in a worſe Condition than that of La Merced. The Great Church is ſo ſhattered, that they have been obliged to build a wooden one in the Market-place; all the old Building of St. Paul's is fallen, and the New is but badly off; many private Houſes are intirely deſtroyed, and all have ſuffered, except three or four that were new and very ſtrong. I ſaw a Letter from the Vicar of Coquimbo, giving an Account of the Deſolation there, occaſioned by this Earthquake: Their Church is quite deſtroyed, ſave the Altar; the Franciſcan ſuffered little, being new and of Stone, as is that of La Merced; the San Domingo with its Convent is ruin'd, and the Walls of the San Auguſtin's moſt demoliſhed, as are moſt of the private Houſes. The Farm-Houſes were carried away by the Sea, and four Perſons were killed, and two are miſſing; 'tis likewiſe ſaid that five or ſix died at St. Jago. The Accounts from Conception are much the ſame: At the firſt Shock the Sea broke in, but not ſo as to do any Damage, it having been obſerved in Time by ſome Fiſhers and a Soldier, who put every one on their Guard; it flowed after with ſuch Violence up the River, near to the Merced, that in its Return it ſwept away more than 200 Houſes. The San Franciſcan and S. John, and S. Auguſtin Churches, the Biſhop's Palace, and the Governor's, Tobarzo and Figueras Houſes, the Shops, and all the old Court of Houſes, ſuffered ſo much, that they are not habitable; but the Church not ſo much as the new Building. Twelve or fourteen Perſons periſhed, and had it not been for the early Advice, half the People would have undergone the ſame Fate. From Valparaiſo they inform us, that the Earthquake and Sea carried away the Houſes, and every Thing in them. At Chillao the Pariſh Church fell, but not S. Domingo, S. Franciſcan, and the Company's. The Mud Houſes had the ſame Fate as other Places. From Quillotta they write, that every Thing was deſtroyed there except the People; but as there were no fine Buildings, nor fine Shops, the Loſs is not ſo great. In the Country the Mud Houſes fell to the Ground, as did the Chapels of San Francis del Monte, Melipella, and others; the Warehouſes only ſtood: The Mountains opened, and in many Places the plain Fields. In the Court Yard of this Houſe we ſaw the Earth opened above a Foot.

The ſame Day the Court of Directors of the Eaſt India Company took 15 Ships into their Service. They alſo made a further Progreſs in examining into Mr. Arbuthnott's Information, but have not yet come to any Determination.

The Ships belonging to the Spaniſh Biſcay Company, which ſailed ſome Time ago from St. Sebaſtian's for Carraccas, have been condemn'd as innavigable.

There are now 10 of the South-Sea Company's Ships returned from Greenland, but we don't hear of their having brought more than five Whales, three of which were caught by one Ship.

We hear that their Majeſties and the Royal Family will continue at Hampton-Court till the latter End of September, and afterwards remain at Richmond for ſome Weeks, in order to be in Town at St. James's the latter End of October next.

A certain Preacher in Town hath bound up the Lord Biſhop of London's three Paſtoral Letters in one neat Volume, with theſe Words in large Letters of Gold on each Side of the Cover, there not being room to put it on the Back.

Unicus eſt nobis Bibliotheca Liber.
One Book's my Library.

Yeſterday Morning early the Lady of Robert Aſhley, Eſq; was ſafely deliver'd of a Son.

Preferment. The Right Rev. the Lord Biſhop of Worceſter has preſented Dr. Nathaniel Hough, Rector of St. George's in Southwark, to the Rectory of Newington. For the holding of which two Livings, being contiguous, the ſaid Dr. Hough has obtained a Diſpenſation of the King and the Archbiſhop.

Deaths. On Sunday laſt died, at his Seat in Leiceſterſhire, Samuel Low, Eſq; Member of Parliament for Alborough in Suffolk.——The laſt Letters from Jamaica mention the Death of Col. Townſhend, which happen'd on the firſt of June laſt, and ſeveral other Officers belonging to the two Regiments there.

Leghorn, July 21. N. S. We are aſſured from Lerica, that a Courier paſſed by that Place, with Advice of the Ducheſs of Parma's having been delivered of a Son the 18th Inſtant. Laſt Sunday a French Ship, called the Annunciation, ſailed from hence with Warlike Stores, Guns, and Ammunition, for Corſica, and about 100 Natives of that Iſland, which Ship was ſoon after taken by the Gallies belonging to the Republick of Genoa, who chained to the Oars all the People they found on board.

Cadiz, July 17. On the 14th the two Aſſogues Ships arriv'd here from La Vera Cruz, but laſt from the Havanna, in 48 Days. The regiſter'd Treaſure in the Aſſogues amounts to 3,352,888 Pieces of Eight, and ſix Ryalls, of which the King's Part is but 451,939 Pieces of Eight, and five Ryalls, which Sum, ſuppoſing that the King has made Uſe of ſome Part of the laſt Flota's Treaſure, will not go far in re-placing it; and as we hear nothing of the delivering it, 'tis feared the whole of this Treaſure will alſo be detained from the Proprietors, until the Arrival of the Galleons enables the Court to make good to the Proprietors what they have made Uſe of. It is ſaid that Clavijo's Squadron will ſoon put to Sea, and wait off the Capes for the Arrival of a Britiſh Squadron.

FRIDAY, July 30.

Yeſterday Morning about Two o'Clock a Fire broke out in a back Yard belonging to Mr. Fairchild, a Coach-maker in Great Queen-ſtreet, which burnt his Workhouſe, ſeveral Coaches, and a conſiderable Quantity of Timber; alſo a Coach-houſe and Stable in his Grace the Duke of Newcaſtle's Yard, but timely Aſſiſtance prevented its ſpreading any further.

At the Aſſizes held laſt Monday at Hertford, only one Priſoner was try'd. His Indictment was for ſtealing three Pecks of Barley, of which he was acquitted.

Orders are ſent to the Officer commanding the Battallion of Guards at Rocheſter, to march forthwith for Deal.

A new Regulation is order'd to be made in the Charterhouſe, there having been of late great Abuſes, with reſpect to the Diſpoſition of the Charity of that Eſtabliſhment to Perſons who have no Right to the ſame.

Her Grace the Ducheſs Dowager of Marlborough, we hear, has been pleaſed to contribute 500l. to the poor Sufferers by the late Fire at Blandford, from whence the Marquiſs her Grandſon takes his Title, excluſive of Tiverton.

An Account of the Robberies which were committed by Bernard Fink (and his Companions) a Youth of fifteen Years of Age the 28th of January paſt, and executed at Tyburn the 26th Inſtant.

THE firſt Robbery which I ever committed was in Company with William Warrington, Hugh Morris, and James Bryan, in King-ſtreet, Golden-ſquare; where we ſtopt a Coach and robb'd an Apothecary's Wife, of the Value of 10s. and 6d.——The next was in the ſame Street; we met a Woman, and attack'd her, who ſaid ſhe had been at a Trial at Weſtminſter; we took from her a Crown, with a green Purſe; we ask'd her the Reaſon why ſhe had not more Money about her, upon which ſhe reply'd, ſhe had paid all her Money at Weſtminſter among the Lawyers —— In the ſame Street we met with a Col. of the Guards, we took from him a Guinea and ſome Silver, a Sword, a Gold-headed Cane, the Head was valu'd at 8l. and we ſold it for 30s. and likewiſe we took from him a German Flute, which he had in a green Bag; I play'd upon it all the Way down the Street; the ſame Night I was taken up, and committed to Tothill-fields Bridewell, on Suſpicion of being concern'd in Street-Robberies; but no Perſon appearing againſt me I was diſcharg'd.——After I was diſcharg'd, I had not Grace enough to leave off my wicked Courſes. I with Hugh Morris, going a-long Piccadilly one Evening, we attack'd a Gentleman, and as ſoon as we attack'd him, he cry'd out; we reply'd to him, Sir, do not be frighted, Money we want, and Money we muſt have; ſo we took from him 15s. the Watchmen coming their Rounds, we bid the Gentleman go about his Buſineſs, and not to ſpeak one Word, and if he did, he was a dead Man; upon which he ſaid, upon my Word, I will not; as he was croſſing the Way, he ſaid, Gentlemen, Will you have any Thing elſe? I having a very indifferent Hat, I call'd him back, and made an Exchange with him, and told him, an Exchange is no Robbery; Gentlemen, ſays he, will you have my Wig alſo; Hugh Morris ſwore he would ſhoot the Gentleman if he did not go back and ſhew him where his Watch was; the Gentleman reply'd, he had not any Watch about him, or any where elſe; ſo took his Leave of us, and wiſh'd us better Succeſs. The ſame Night going along we met a Man, who was very much in Liquor, whom we attack'd, when we bid him ſtand, upon which he reply'd, you Rogues, I value you not; we made no more to do, but took our Piſtol and put it to his Noſe, and bid him ſmell to it, which ſomewhat ſurpriz'd him; I thought, Gentlemen, you were but in Jeſt; Sir, ſays I, you ſhall ſee that we are in Earneſt, for we took from him his Watch, and ſome Silver, but what Quantity I cannot well remember.—After that we went to Hedge-Lane, where ſome of our Companions quarrelled about ſharing of the Monies, which we had taken that Night; ſo I and Johnſon left them; and going along we met a Butcher, and bid him ſtand, upon which he laid hold of my Companion by the Collar, and at the ſame Time laid hold of his Piſtol, and reply'd you Rogue, I do not value you, and puſh'd him againſt the Wall. I ſtepping up to him, ſwore an Oath (which God forgive me) If he did not let my Companion go, I would ſhoot him thro' the Head; the Butcher reply'd, I will not let him go, you Rogue; upon which I ſhot him thro' the Arm; immediately he cried out I am a dead Man, and fell down; the Noiſe alarm'd ſome Coachmen, who was thereabouts, and likewiſe a Watchman, but we drove them before us, by ſhowing our Piſtols, and ſo got off.——The ſame Evening we met a Gentleman by King-ſtreet, near Golden-ſquare; as he was coming along he drew his Sword, and croſs'd the other Side of the Way, and bid us ſtand off, which Johnſon reply'd, we don't value your Sword, and ſhowing him our Piſtols, he was very much ſurpriz'd; he immediately flung down his Sword, and ſaid, Gentlemen, uſe me civilly, and take what I have; when we took from him a Silver Tobacco Box, a Silver-hilted Sword, and a lac'd Hat and ſome Silver, with a memorandum Book; after we had taken all that we could find, we made off. Another Evening we met a Gentleman by Hanover-ſquare, juſt by the Road, where he took me in his Arms and flung me over the Rails into the Road, I immediately recover'd my Legs and went up to him, and gave him a Punch in the Guts with my Piſtol, upon which he ſaid, I am eaſy; then we robb'd, and took from him a Silver-hilted Sword, a Cane, ſome Guineas with ſome Silver, we thought the Head of the Cane had been Gold, ſo we carried it to a Goldſmith, but when he ſaw it, he laugh'd at us, and told us it was Braſs. After we had committed this Robbery we were purſu'd, but got clear off, after this Manner, for croſſing the Way where ſome Watchmen were ſtanding, they ask'd us what was the Matter, we told them ſome Gentlemen call'd Chair, and ſo got off.—About eight or nine Months ago, Hugh Morris, O'Bryan, Johnſon and Warrington (who is now to die with me) ſaid, Bernard let us go to Windſor, you know there is to be an Inſtallment, where we ſhall have an Opportunity to get good Booty; accordingly we all did; but when we were down, we were inform'd the Conſtables were out after us; ſo that we had not an Opportunity to do any Thing worth while; we could not be idle, for a ſmall Time that we were there, we us'd to go to Chandler's Shops and Grocers, under pretence of begging ſome Small-Beer, ſo when they went backwards to draw it, the mean Time we took an Opportunity to rob the Drawers of what Money there was in them. —— About Twelve Months ago, I, Johnſon, Hugh Morris, and Bryan, went out towards Pancraſs, in order to ſee what Booty we could fix on, going along we ſaw three Fellows going a Field or two before us; I ſaid to my Companions, I believe they are upon the ſame Lay as we are; we had not gone far in Fig-Lane, but we heard a Piſtol go off, and a little while after, we heard the Groaning of a Man, upon which, I ſaid thoſe Rogues have ſhot the Man; (whoſe Name, as I have been inform'd ſince, was Tickford) we all agreed to follow them, and to have ſhot every one of them, for being ſo barbarous to commit Murder; (for that I always did abhor) we follow'd them three Fields, but could get no ſight of them, ſo I deſir'd them to go back and ſee if they could find out the Perſon that was ſhot, which we did, and ſaw his Brains lying on the Ground and juſt expiring. In returning for London, we met a Gentleman in a Chaiſe, upon which Hugh Morris attack'd, and the Gentleman ſaid he was robbed by three Perſons juſt before, and had nothing; but Hugh Morris ſwore he would ſhoot him for having nothing, I ſtepp'd up to him, and ſaid if you hurt the Gentleman, I will ſhoot you thro' the Head; the Gentleman reply'd, God bleſs you, you are all young Men, I wiſh you better Succeſs ——About ten Months ago, we attack'd all Comers and Goers in Bond-ſtreet, by Hanover-ſquare; eſpecially one that had been at Sea with my Companion Johnſon; but at that Time he ſaid he liv'd with Col. Chartres, as a Butler: When we bid him ſtand, he ask'd us, whether we were upon our Fun, knowing of Johnſon: we reply'd, You ſhall ſee whether we are upon our Fun, ſo immediately ſhow'd him our Piſtols, at which, he making a Noiſe, a Gentleman's Servant came out to his Aſſiſtance; but we ſoon made him quiet, for we laid hold of him, and were going to rob him, but he begg'd very much, and ſaid, he was but a poor Servant, and had but a Crown and a Watch about him, we told him, If he would ſtand ſtill and not ſtir, we would not hurt him, upon this the Footman did comply, and ſtood and look'd on all the Time that we were robbing of Johnſon's Acquaintance, who ſaid, he was formerly a Midſhip-man in the same Ship with him.——The next Night we met a Roman Priest, in Hanover-street, by Hanover-square, as he was knocking at his own Door; we pull'd him off the Steps, and push'd him up against his own Rails, when two Servant Maids on the other Side of the Way, looking out of their Windows, and seeing what we were doing; they cry'd out, upon which, Bryan stepp'd over with a Pistol in his Hand, and swore, if they did not pull down their Windows, he would shoot them; the Girls being frighted, put them down. Then we rifled Mr. Priest, and we took from him, a Silver-hilted Sword, a Silver Watch, a Green Purse, with 10s. and 6d. in Gold, and some Silver; we likewise took a Cane from him, but he begg'd we would be so kind as to return him his Cane again; accordingly we did. Since I have been under my Misfortunes, I sent to him, to let him know where I had pawn'd his Watch, but he never came, it lying but for 15s. and I believe the Watch to be worth 5 or 6l. but the Sword I sold to that honest Watch-maker, near the Sun-Tavern in Fleet-street, for 18s.——The chief Cause of my coming to this untimely End, and several more unhappy Creatures ruin, is owing to a Publick House in St. Lawrence-lane, St. Giles's in the Fields; who countenances us in all our Robberies, and likewise harbours us, whenever we have committed any: For in the back Part of the House, they have a Place where there is several Beds for us; and we could come in any Hour of the Night; and what we get we spend there upon vile Women; when all is gone, they encourage us to turn out again; and this unhappy Way of Life we live, till we are brought to this ignominious Death. I exhort all good People (especially the Officers of those Parishes, where there are such wicked Houses, which I am afraid there are too many in the City of London) to get them suppress'd; for many Parents in this popular City, who have Children, will be bound to pray for you.——I exhort more particularly, the Officers of St. Giles's in the Fields, to get that House above-mention'd suppress'd; for then Gentlemen may go in more Safety about their lawful Business; and likewise in taking an Airing to Hamstead or Highgate, without being so frequently attack'd as they are——There is one Thing more, which would be very necessary to have suppress'd, and prosecuted to the utmost Severity of the Law, that is, Persons who buys the Goods of us, which we call LOCKS: There is a Watch-maker in Fleet-street, a very remarkable Man, he going almost double, with his two Knees meeting; I am willing to describe him, that you may mark him from other Men: I have sold him Watches and Swords many Times, which I have taken from Gentlemen: And likewise he keeps a House of Ill-Fame in Fetter-lane; to the great Disturbance of his honest Neighbours.

This I testify to be the Truth of the above Facts,

In the Cells of Newgate, July 25, 1731.
